

Amnesty International is concerned about the continued deterioration of the human rights situation in Ecuador, under the administration of President Daniel Noboa.

The majority of these reported human rights violations were registered in Imbabura and Pichincha, two Ecuadorian provinces with the largest indigenous populations.

Today, new threats are emerging, and the Ecuadorian people's decision remains unfulfilled.

The majority of these reported human rights violations were registered in Imbabura and Pichincha, two Ecuadorian provinces with the largest indigenous ...

Oil exploitation and mining continue to threaten Ecuador's Yasuni National Park and the Huaorani communities who inhabit it. Despite constitutional protections and international awareness, ...

The Waorani people of Pastaza won a historic ruling in Ecuadorian court protecting half a million acres of their territory in the Amazon rainforest from being ...

Internal forced displacement in Ecuador rose sharply between 2020 and 2024, driven by criminal violence, the expansion of organised armed groups, ...

The environmental damage caused more than half a century of oil activity in Ecuador's Amazon are multiplying yearly without effective remediation by the government or the oil companies ...

Ecuador's plans to offer dozens of blocks of land for oil exploration for more than $47 billion has prompted opposition from seven Indigenous peoples in the Amazon.

Amnesty warns of repression in Ecuador: excessive use of force, arbitrary detentions, and persecution of social leaders during the national strike.

Ecuador is failing to comply with key provisions of an Inter-American Court of Human Rights ruling to protect the Tagaeri and Taromenane Indigenous peoples from nearby oil facilities in ...

Internal forced displacement in Ecuador rose sharply between 2020 and 2024, driven by criminal violence, the expansion of organised armed groups, and a socio-economic crisis worsened ...

The environmental damage caused more than half a century of oil activity in Ecuador's Amazon are multiplying yearly ...

The Waorani people of Pastaza won a historic ruling in Ecuadorian court protecting half a million acres of their territory in the Amazon rainforest from being earmarked for oil drilling.

Web: <https://csc-energia.com.pl>